My name is Saabir.
 I'm 13 and I live on the streets of Manila. My parents are poor farm-workers, so I came to the city to earn money. When I arrived last year, I begged and I collected rubbish for recycling. I slept in abandoned buildings, under bridges or in public parks, but bigger kids kept bullying me and took my money.
 Now I'm protected by a street gang - I sell newspapers in the morning and flowers at night; I give 50% of my earnings to the gang, and they give me a safe place to sleep. And I go to school two hours a day.
